De Feldan's Alleged Common-Law Wife Sues for Divorce.

Carrie Smith, His Legal Wife, Named as Co-Respondent.

An action for absolute divorce has been brought in the Superior Court by Dora De Feldan, through her attorney.

A. B. Jawomorwer, who says she is the common-law wife of Rudolph F. De Feldan, a well-known man about town and until recently one of the proprietors of the Hotel Feldan, at Eighty-fifth street and Lexington avenue.

Is a modest sample of his affection. It was was written in September, 1891, after a quarrel.

Feldan.
She alleges that she first met De Feldan at the Belvidere Hotel in January, 1891, when she was employed as overseer of the linen department. De Feldan, she claims, was a dashing young fellow, who seemed to be always well supplied with money. He took her to theatres and other places of amusement and professed the deepest love for her.

ment and professed the deepest love for her.

About a month after the first meeting, according to her affidavit, they became engaged to be married. The date fixed was March 10.

Subsequently they called on John Blum, a brother-in-law of Miss Todtherg's, and various other friends, and in the presence of each De Feldan is alleged to have declared Miss Todtberg to be his affianced wife.

Shortly before the day agreed upon for the wedding, Miss Todtberg declares that De Feldan told her he feared that if his father heard of his marriage he might, under the peculiar laws of Austria. take measures to prevent him from coming into the inheritance of an estate valued at about 390,000 when he arrived at the age of twenty-eight years. The income from the estate amounting to about $5,000, he already enjoyed.

He asked for a postponement of a ceremonial marriage at that time, and suggested that they announce to their friends that they had been secretly married, and live as man and wife until such time as the contract could be solemnized by a minister.

Miss Todtberg says she refused to consent to such an arrangement until after he had told her that he had consent to such an arrangement until after he had told her that he had consent to such an arrangement until after he had told her that he had consent to such an arrangement until after he had told her that he had consent to such an arrangement until after he had told her that he had consent to such an arrangement until after he had told her that he had consent to such an arrangement until after he had told her that he had consent to such an arrangement until after he had told her that he had consent to such an arrangement until after he had told the refused to the arrangement.

In October, the complaint alleges, they returned to the city and took a flat at 212 West Fifty-eighth stret. From there they removed, in January, 1882, to the Cavanata Flats, at Lexington avenue and Eighty-seventh Street.

Lexington avenue and Eighty-seventh street.

In May De Feldan entered into a copartnership with Henry Barkhouse, a brother-in-law of Miss Todtberg, and opened the Hotel "Feldan," where they went to live.

In August of that year Miss Todtberg's health failed and she went to Europe on money gurnished by De Feldan, While she was abroad De Feldan left the city and she failed to lind any trace of him until Jan. 28 last, when she heard of his marriage to Miss Smith, at Yonkers.

She at once began an action for divorce and petitioned the Court for counsel fees and alimony.

When seen by an "Evening World" reporter yesterday Miss Todtberg seemed very much depressed. She said De Feldan had always been very fond of her and signified his affection in many ways.

She exhibited a bundle of letters

Haven above grant that you will be returned to your unfortunate.

Miss Todtberg declares that her determination to have nothing more to be with him unless he consented to go through a ceremonial marriage, was not affected by the above letter, and she wrote him to that effect.

De Feldan was persistent, it appears, and wrote her again as follows:

Dearest Heart: Your answer to my letter received. The cold tone of the same pains me very much. If you still have a spark of love for me, you will come to see me at 9.30 o'clock, for who knows that this may be the last evening I may be at your side. My nerves are overstruing, and I feel very unhappy.

Only you can cure me of this gnawing pain, therefore come to your R.

This letter seemed to soften her heart, and she returned to him and lived, she says, happily with him until the day she sailed for Europe to recuperate her health.
